ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS. THE Company has been formed for the purpose of constructing, equipping, and working a series of Low Level Steam Tramways in the City of Victoria, Hongkong. Two Special Ordinances (Nos. 6 and 18 of 1883) have been passed by the Legislative Council and the Government authorizing the construction and working of the same.

Victoria is very favourably adapted for Tramways, owing to its configuration, the easy gradients of its principal streets, (the main thoroughfares from the East to the West ends, along which the Tramways will be laid), and the immense passenger traffic.

The Tramways will be constructed in the best and most substantial manner, and with all the latest improvements, with steel girders, bedded in concrete, but no wood or other perishable material will be used.

The Tramways are intended to be worked by Steam Traction, such being much more economical, trustworthy, and under more effective control, having more power of overcoming gradients, and giving better results (pecuniary and otherwise) than horse, compressed air, electricity or other motive power.

The engines will be constructed according to the Board of Trade regulations and will in no way be a nuisance, being almost noiseless, and having no machinery, smoke, or steam visible.

The Committee anticipate, from the relatively low cost per mile of the projected Tramways, combined with other numerous advantages connected with the undertaking, that the dividend returns will be satisfactory.

There is no agreement or contract in existence affecting this undertaking. Plans and Estimates may be seen at the Office, and the full Prospectus and Forms of Application for Shares and every other information may be obtained from

THE SECRETARY AND ENGINEERS, No. 13, PRAYA CENTRAL, HONGKONG.

APPLICATIONS for SHARES will be received until the 30th SEPTEMBER. Hongkong, August 7, 1884. 1310

This Standard Work on the Chinese Language, constructed on the basis of Knight's Imperial Dictionary, contains all Chinese characters in practical use, and which although arranged according to the sounds of the oldest dialect of China, the Cantonese, it gives also the Mandarin pronunciation of all characters explained in the book, so that its usefulness is by no means confined to the Cantonese Dialect, but the work is a practically complete Thesaurus of the whole Written Language of China, ancient and modern, as used all over the Empire, whilst its introductory chapters serve the purpose of a philological guide to the student.

A Supplement, arranged for being bound and used by itself, and containing a List of the Radicals, an Index, and a List of Surnames, will be published and sold

JOHN BULL AND HIS ISLAND.

XXVI.
If you would look at a really lasting impression of St. Petersburg, visit it at the time of the year, when you have just come from freezing, you must rub it with snow every five minutes.

If you would keep an impression of London that nothing would efface from your memory, come and see it on a Sunday, and, if possible, let it be on Sunday when there is a good east wind blowing.

All the shops are closed; not a creature stirring; miles of deserted-looking streets everywhere; the great houses and the great squares are all empty. Around and above, look where you will, the same sad and stolid faces and stolid limbs to the marrow of your bones. It gives you cold shivers.

Here and there you may see a few rough-looking, pipe in mouth, waiting for the doors to be opened. These doors are only opened from one o'clock to three in the afternoon, and from six to eleven in the evening, on Sundays. At a quarter to eleven, in the morning, the bells begin to ring. The sound of these bells is harsh and extremely irritating. I have asked and been told the reason why bells of bells are so harshly heard. The churches, as the churches, are so strongly as the churches, would never stand them.

Now you see a sight that the English say excites the envy of the whole world; the English nation going to church or chapel. Each one carries a book, and a hymn-book. The bigger these books are, the better it looks. Some are of great size, and they are carefully displayed as much as possible. They have not to be carried far, it is no superhuman task, the churches are so close as numerous as the public-houses, and everybody has one close to his door.

We will not enter the churches just yet; we will reserve that for a special chapter. The service concludes at half-past twelve or one, and the English nation returns home to dine. The evening service commences at seven.

During the interval the English nation takes a nap. The fathers and mothers half asleep in their easy chairs, tell few rules and a glass of port. No visiting on Sunday. The children read the Bible or the true stories of some wonderful conversation out of a tract, that has been left at the door by an agent of the Bible Society.

A good Englishman, who has not out during church time, if he does not mean to go to church, he alleges a slight indisposition as an excuse. There are very few who admit that they are not church-goers; there are none that boast of it.

One Sunday morning, whilst I was on a visit to an English family, I proposed a walk. A son of the family offered to accompany me. As we were leaving the house, he noticed that I had taken my walking-stick. (Take an umbrella, said he.) "It looks more elegant."

These sports of the Bible Society, with their tracts, are terrible bores. You meet with them in omnibuses, in trains, in the streets, everywhere. With a hypocritical smile they beg you to accept a tract. Your best plan, if you would, is to have done with them, is to accept the piece of paper, put it in your pocket, and say: "Thank you." I met with one once who made quite a deal out of it.

"Sir," he began, "God commands every man to repent."

"I thank you for reminding me, but I must not forget it," I said.

"Ah! sir, you are a foreigner; seek salvation, save your soul, your life is in this country."

"Have you the keys of Paradise, then?" I asked him, and that your calling to bother people in this manner! Leave me alone.

"Sir, believe me, all men are sinners. David himself was one."

"I agree with you," I exclaimed.

"Yes, but be repentant."

"There was room for repentance."

"The repentance should make us forget the crime."

"Exactly. But why, then, do you hang round me, and annoy me at the turn of the conversation?"

"Because, by exciting them, whilst they are in a state of repentance, we send them to Paradise. If we set them at liberty, they will turn to sin again."

"You tell me, and I tell you, 'for you seem to be an intelligent man, would you receive in your house, at your table, with your good wife and children, a man who has caused the death of another in order to make love to his wife?'"

"You tell me, and I tell you, 'for you seem to be an intelligent man, would you receive in your house, at your table, with your good wife and children, a man who has caused the death of another in order to make love to his wife?'"

"Ah! he replied, 'your levity is out of place. Laugh at me, you say, but I am serious. We shall meet again at the Last Day.' After giving me this appointment he left me, with a look more fierce than a demon."

"I have often heard that these agents do not make any proselytes, especially among foreigners, in England. I do not believe a word of it. I could tell of some wonderful conversions myself. One day I received the following letter:—'Sir, having lost my situation in France, I came over to England, where I have since been living for several years past. These explanations will make you as well acquainted with my private life as I am myself. Since my arrival in England, I have completely changed my mind, and I have become a Protestant and a total abstainer. Unfortunately, I am now in bad health. Compatriots in a foreign land should help one another, and if you would lend me a few pounds, or even one, you would oblige me greatly, and I shall be exceedingly thankful to you. Be kind enough to receive, with my anticipated thanks, the expression, etc.'"

Among the other Sunday heroes, the street preachers must not be forgotten. They are generally excited workmen, who, having received from Heaven a mission to go and convert the fellow-creatures, relate their experience of life to the public; how they were once nothing but miserable sinners, how they have since been converted, and how easy it is for others to do likewise. They take up their stand in some open place, in parties of five or six, accompanied by one or two old maids, more than many others, who, old maids often to God that they have had no chance of giving to them a pure and loving heart. A circle is formed, and a monotonous hymn sung; this is to attract the passer-by. One of the party steps forward, takes off his hat, collects his thoughts in it, and commences his discourse. The other party varies.

"My dear friends, death is at hand; are you prepared to meet it? A crowd of sinners gather round, silent and respectful. It is not a religious sermon, but a simple matter of that boundless respect which is entertained in England for the liberty of meeting. The men smoke their pipes and listen; it is the only distinction to be had on Sundays, so they avail themselves of it. They do not pray, but on the other hand, neither do they mock. The sermon are dull, tedious, and generally full of personal experiences. 'My dear friends, said one of these street evangelists, 'I am happy to be able to say that I am saved, that I am now on my way to Heaven. A month ago, I could not have said this, I was the slave of the devil. Indeed, it was easy to see he was telling the truth, for the devil, as you are now, is a very wicked creature. The only street orators, who are occasionally amusing, are the agents of the Temperance Society. They, I quite believe, do some good. They speak to the workers in languages that they can understand; they ask questions, to raise objections; answers are always forthcoming. 'Here, I say, I've got something to say to you, just listen a minute,' said one of them to a ragged workman, who was listening one day at a meeting of this kind. 'You carry your money to the publican, who makes you drunk every day, don't you? You and your wife and children starve, while the publican has his joint of beef, or rather your joint of beef—for your money paid for it—coasting under your nose; only look at your worn-out boots; who is there that would give twopenny for everything you have on your back? I am a workman like you; but look at my good strong boots; then look at my worn-out shoes; look at my coat, look at my overcoat. To-day when I go home, I shall find a good dinner ready; it isn't the publican, who makes me hungry, it is the publican, who explains the difference. Why don't you do the same?'"

"What?" replied the man thus harangued, "can't a man take a glass with a friend? You're to be sure. Drink one, if you like; but if you are not satisfied with one glass, sign this pledge, and I did, and bid yourself to drink nothing but water."

"These people, who are so abundantly supplied, do not lose their temper. Some reply with a laugh. 'Well, old fellow, you can drink water if you enjoy it. I am off to drink a glass of grog to your health.' I have seen others go to the register and sign. The missionaries are not all completely disinterested. Some of them make a fine income by preaching temperance. I know of one, an American, who wanted fifteen guineas for delivering half-an-hour's address at the Crystal Palace. The same individual asked for a hundred and fifty-five pounds for himself and his wife, who were wanted to preach temperance at Brighton for ten days; and, what is still more astonishing, he got it."

The Americans are business-like people. For that matter, they will fare well so long as there are guests to be picked.

This notice is to be found posted up in a Virginia blue-stem's shop. "Notice—The partnership heretofore existing between me and Miss Skimmer is hereby dissolved. Denial what one of firm will settle with me."

The Americans are business-like people. For that matter, they will fare well so long as there are guests to be picked.

These notices are not all completely disinterested. Some of them make a fine income by preaching temperance. I know of one, an American, who wanted fifteen guineas for delivering half-an-hour's address at the Crystal Palace. The same individual asked for a hundred and fifty-five pounds for himself and his wife, who were wanted to preach temperance at Brighton for ten days; and, what is still more astonishing, he got it."
